Under General Act.

Through recent legislation the District
National Guard is now brought under the scope of this general act. All these facts will be weighed by the officers of the brigade before they pledge themselves in writing to give their services in case of war.

As a further indication of the new order of things, there has just been issued from brigade headquarters a circular which has all the warlike ring of a communication sent to troops about to engage in a campaign.

The circular declares that the absolute essentials of a fighting command are ability to form line from column and column from line, to deploy properly, and to fire properly. The company commanders are urged to devote all their energy to training their squad leaders by throwing repetitive squad drills. These leaders are to practice their squads in advancing by rushes and by creeping, in loading in all positions of the ody and while marching, in transmitting orders and signals, and in general skirmish work.

Formal Drill Abandoned.

Extended order, which is the normal formation in actual fighting, will be made the principal feature of all instruction, and will to a certain extent supersede the more formal drill where keeping step and until camp, whether in the armory hall or in the street, must, according to orders from headquarters, be devoted to extended order work. The squad leaders are to be trained in using field glasse Law Requires the Pledge of Every for identifying targets, in estimating distances quickly and accurately, and in giving commands to their men who are to be taught to work together in a team. In order that the men may become ac-customed to alding each other they are to be assigned to permanent squads, each D streamer keeping a list of his men and looking out for them at the company

Frequent instruction in guard mounting is to be given from now until camp, and each enlisted man in the brigade is to be furnished with a copy of a small pamphlet entitled "Orders for Sentinels

It is to Baron Rosen that the Muscovite crown has been indebted more than to any one else for the possession of this big island, so rich in mineral wealth and commanding the mouth of the great artery of Asiatic trade, the River Amur. True, Rosen was quite a young man in those days, a mere acting attache and acting secretary. He was accredited. It redounded, however, as an officer of the guards at St. Peters- not only the indorsement of her hus-way diplomatic posts.

It was his good fortune, however, to find himself attracted to a marketon of which the chief was M. de Sarave, for which the chief was M. de S. 110, 101 many years afterward envoy at WashIngton, where his wife, the gifted and the prince and the principality of Bulthe prince and the principality of Bulbrilliant, though homely, Mme. Struve, the prince and the principality of Bulleft delightful memories. The de Struves garla in accordance with Muscovite views their influence played an important role in shaping the successful diplomatic career of the ex-guardsman.
